The abstract should be informative (not contain general phrases, not repeat the information presented in the main part of the article); meaningful; structured (correspond to the following structure: Aim of the article. Results. Scientific novelty. Conclusions). Recommended abstract length: 1800-2000 characters with spaces. Study results should make up about 65% of the abstract. It is not allowed to use abbreviations, references and footnotes in the abstract.

Keywords (Times New Roman, 12-point font size, width alignment, italics): keyword 1; keyword 2; ... keyword 7

Keywords (5-7 words or phrases) should not be duplicated in the title of the article or contain common words. Keywords should be given in the nominative case, separated by semicolons.

Introduction (Times New Roman, 14-point font size, bold, left alignment)

Introduction text (Times New Roman, 14-point font size, width alignment)

This section contains a formulation of the problem and its relevance, and highlights the current state of its research. Contains a review of research and publications by other researchers related to the topic. Highlights previously unresolved issues, parts of the general problem to which the article is devoted.

Recent Research and Publication Analysis (Times New Roman, 14-point font size, italics, width alignment). Recent Research and Publication Analysis text (Times New Roman, 14-point font size, width alignment)

It should contain a review of research and publications by scholars (8–10 papers) over the past 5 years that have analysed certain aspects of the problem under consideration. The use of data, images, ideas taken from any printed or electronic sources should be duly acknowledged. Each name of a researcher should be accompanied by an appropriate reference to References. The titles and years of sources in the text should clearly correspond to the data in References. References in the text should be given in APA (American Psychological Association (APA) Style), 7th edition.

Aim of the article (Times New Roman, 14-point font size, bold, left alignment)

The text of the aim of the article (Times New Roman, 14-point font size, width alignment)

This section contains a statement of the aim of the article. The aim should be formulated briefly, as clearly as possible, and correspond to the title. In addition to the main aim, intermediate objectives may be indicated.

Main research material (Times New Roman, 14-point font size, bold, left alignment)

Main research material text (Times New Roman, 14-point font size, width alignment)

This section presents the main material of the study. The obtained scientific results must be substantiated, have novelty and practical significance. The main points of the study can be illustrated with tables or graphic materials (the number should not exceed 10). They should not repeat the material presented in the text.

Conclusions (Times New Roman, 14-point font size, bold, left alignment)

Text of the Conclusions (Times New Roman, 14-point font size, width alignment)

Conclusions should reflect the research results; correspond to the aim and title of the article. The conclusions should be logically related to the content of the article; do not contain information not provided in the text of the manuscript. It is important to note the scientific novelty of the results, their value and/or significance for the development of science. Finally, it is necessary to formulate prospects for further research in this area.
